Several current and former Rotarians, including JGR 2013-2014 president Mike Mauseth, are working to establish a fourth local club. It would meet bi-weekly in the late afternoon.

In a press release, former GV Rotary president Bill Peters says the new club, expected to be in place by Jan. 1, will be "less focused on corporate fundraising." No more than 10 percent of the new club can be drawn from current Rotarians; 25 members are required to start the club.

For more info, call Peters, 723-9711, or Mike at 523-3423.

LWV pushes participatory democracy

For nearly a century, the League of Women Voters – a non-partisan national organization open to all voters – has worked to increase voter registration, education, and participation. The League provides voter services and takes action on certain public policy topics following extensive study and consensus processes. Dr. Carolyn Brown, a retired OBGYN, is president of the local 113-member LWV. She came to Alaska with the Public Health Service in 1965 and has worked throughout state and parts of Africa. She served on the national LWV board 2012-2014. Services and position papers can be found at juneaulwv.org
