Featuring folk

for 43 years –

all free

This will be the 43rd year that musicians from across the state, Canada and the Lower 48 trek to Juneau in April to revel in a free folk music festival. The first Alaska Folk Festival was one night of music at the old Alaska State Museum. Today the festival features seven days of free performances, workshops, and dances at Centennial Hall and at the Juneau Arts & Humanities Center – to say nothing of the late night jam sessions at various venues around town. Every year a professional group is featured; this year it's the Murphy Beds. Erin Heist, above right, is current president of the non-profit board.

Glory Hole cooks last week included Annette Smith, above right; Dan Bleidorn, above; as well as, from L to R below, Claudette Kreuzenstein, Dan, Tara Peters, Nicole Legere, Annette, and new member Karen Carey. Amy Lujan shopped. Lucy Ibesate, Eric Carver and Marciano Duran also assisted. JGR has cooked dinner at the shelter on the 4th

Thursday of the month for 30 years. Robert Minch was lead chef for the first 28 of those years. The menu always is Spanish. Thank you Claudette for the photo!
